Click here for details, information and past stories the school's lawyers protect all public records for this. According to the tip, Boysdev requested records on April 15 relating to Garth Brooks or any other music events scheduled for Albertson Stadium. But just 45 minutes before the statutory limit for record production expires, the school turned us down. I'm a university lawyer and I reviewed your application, a Montoya ceremonial reporter. I've determined that any responsive records will be exempt from disclosure... Montoya then cited laws around attorney-client privilege and trade secrets. - Continues below the ads - this suggests that the school has such records, but legal reasons have been found not to release them. But the school only released similar records last year to Boysdev. More on that in a minute. Garth Brooks in Boise? Garth Brooks Boise's melunt began in March when KBOI-AM morning show host Mike Casper posted that he was hearing about possible summer dates for the country star. The next day, Brian Harlesin seemed to confirm it. Country music icon Garth Brooks arrives at Blue in July???? BSU football coach Harlesin said Thursday: I found out about it last week. We'll adjust our summer plans, but that's what it is... If it's him, I definitely want to be a part of it. Harlesin said he was a fan... pic.twitter.com/mldGgabkbo - Mike Prater (@MikePrater) March 14, 2019 So, late Monday, Casper raised the ante, posting a Video to Garth Brooks YouTube on his Facebook page. Here's part of his caption: Hmm, Little Bird told me I might have more news to share very soon about a particular concert with a certain superstar who may or may not be going on sale in May, Casper wrote. I guess it's nice to have friends in low places willing to share news and rumors with me, so I can share that with all of you. Brooks will perform at a concert in nearby Eugene, or June 29. [Top golf-style facility designed for Treasure Valley] Mtn. Home Country Music Festival and BSU: Missed Connection? Back to the records. The school complied with a similar request submitted by Bosdev last September. Boise State officials and representatives of Idaho country concerts discussed bringing the Mountain Home Country Music Festival to campus. At the end of 2017, the group behind the annual concert in the country had deep ties to several officials in Boise State. They got into logistics like semi-parking and ticketing technology. They even toured Albertson Stadium just before the Idaho Potato Bowl in 2017. I really feel that you and I together in this place can do great things, Anne Hankins with Idaho Country Concerts reporter Boise State's Lisa Cochran on January 31. Cochran wrote later that day. My intuition tells me that we are people of similar opinions, share a passion for excellence, and 'make it happen' people, Cochran told Henkins. A hesitantly good hotel [upgraded blue video boards arriving at Albertson Stadium] and then, the country music promoter picked up a column by Michael Deeds of the Statesman of Idaho. It's a hint that Boise State wasn't into holding big concerts at Albertson Stadium. Unless Boise State changes its mind about hosting big concerts at Albertson Stadium, we can erase this kind of event, Deeds wrote on Pearl Jam's theoretical date in Boise. I saw pearl jam's story and it's forbidden to do a show at the stadium, promoter Hankins told Boise State's Cochran. Do you feel like we still have the opportunity to get board approval? Boise State Clerk Back the next day. I had to read the story you're referring to; Don't make a stock in it, yes, we have a chance to get confirmation. After that, the public records went cold for months. In June, Hankins rewrote Cochran and apologized for the lack of contact. You were so great with us earlier this year when we saw what it would be (will be) like having MHCMF at the BSU, wrote Hankins. The dynamic has changed within the organization and the risk has been so great in the field that we are definitely struggling with it in general, but we are talking about different ideas and it is impossible to know what new strategies we have to move forward. Two months later, MHCMF officials told Medes that they would put the event into recess for 2019. Public records and Idaho law agencies in Idaho are actually the final arbiter of their records. They have up to ten days to produce records, and some agencies are better than others. The only recourse for a member of the public or a journalist is to petition the District Court. This, of course, creates cost and delays disclosure until it is sorted. I sang with Garth Brooks! I'm freaking out! Said Blake Shelton, shortly after joining his colleague Oki on stage in Boise, Idaho on Friday night. Shelton flew in for Brooks' first two nights at Albertson Stadium to shoot a live music video for Dive Bar, the recently recorded duet Brooks released as a single from his upcoming album. With all due respect paid for: If Shelton is a 400-pound gorilla in country music right now, Brooks will probably still always consider something over 900. Then came a message from the truck outside, over Brooks' ears, that they needed to do again. Are you telling me I suck? Ask Shelton. The 40,000 people who witnessed the first public connecting the two superstars begged to share out loud. Brooks, however, was acting as Shelton's biggest fan, though they barely crossed paths before recording the song less than three months earlier. I didn't know what kind of singer he was until he stepped up to the microphone on the recording, Brooks told Variety before the show. But I mean, you remember this guy hit on Braddock. [Famous songwriter] Bobby Braddock is all about country music. He's in the Hall of Fame. And Braddock, I don't know how to ever take on anyone as a producer. So when this guy comes to town and Braddock's the producer, everybody's gone right away, who the hell is this guy? And what I love about Blake is that he just lived up to it. And he doesn't seem to be a guy who thinks something is stress. If you hang out with him, he just looks like, uh, it's just another day. I wish I was. I love him to death. He's so easy to get along with. They're sympathetic partly because we were 40 miles apart, growing up (in Oklahoma). We dress the same. He will also appear in a hoodie and baseball cap. But the duet wasn't even a twinkle in Brooks' eye until April. Seen About ACMs doing God's land, and there (was) just something in his face, (although) I didn't even know this cat. So I called him and I said, hey, man, I don't know if you'll ever think about it. And he said, hell, yes, I'm in. And then he does this thing that makes you feel 150 years old by going, in high school, man, your stuff... Scheduling video footage proved more difficult than making the recording. He's the nicest guy on the planet... But the busiest guy in the world, Brooks said in a snout to the media before the show. We tried to do it somewhere else. Brooks is doing less than a dozen cities on this year's stadium tour, mostly one-offs Saturday night, and he went every Saturday, too. Then, after Brooks Boise's first show in 27 years -- and the first concert ever held on the famous Smurf Court where the Boise State Broncos play -- sold out in less than an hour, Idaho's new governor, Brad Little, called Brooks to beg for a second show... Which is not to be added to the night before. This not only allowed Brooks to play for more than 80,000 people in a country that has an entire population of just 1.7 million, but also to contact Shelton's team again. I just put in a thing: Hey, I know Friday is just like Saturday, I'm sure... No, he's actually on Friday and there's a joy to doing that. I believe in karma or things happen the way they go, and it's all cards falling in the right place. So I'm going to apologize to the audience Saturday night because this show's not going to be so good because Blake won't be here, but tonight's going to be a blast. Before they made the song's middle performance Friday night, Brooks asked for a bonus for the audience -- a solo round of Shelton's current chart. Instead of doing it back-to-back... It's the coolest crowd you'll ever play for, promised Brooks. Your God's land was number one for two weeks. Would you mind playing the song? Is that cool? Shelton then sang his own hit, accompanied by his own acoustic guitar, with intent so enthusiastic and serious that he seemed even stronger as an intense fulcchi than as a laconian-era countryman, in a musical alternate reality. Hey, there's no one who's just going to defend guitar in front of a stadium, Brooks said. This guy's got the balls to do it. Blake Shelton. Except, of course, Brooks is also a guy who can just play guitar in the stadium. And so, while for a while it seemed Shelton's unexpectedly raw God's land might be the highlight of the night - even more than their combined firepower at the light dive bar - Brooks got his own solo licks during the heddern section, in which he traditionally allows the band to take five minutes and takes requests for deep tracks from the crowd through the signs they hold in the front rows. Someone carries a sign saying emma died two weeks earlier, and Brooks is going to perform Mom in her honor? He did, but not before. The names of the woman and her mother, and say, okay, I know you're still talking to Shirley; Tell her I said hi. I'm so sorry about that, honey. I'm a mama's boy. I miss my mom so much. My mom disappeared 20 years ago and she's here with me. What you're going to love is every day you're going to notice that she's standing right here with you for the rest of your life. There may not have been that much crying at Albertson Stadium since the Boise State Broncos lost to Virginia by double digits in September 2017. But Filament in The Fun has already been set in an otherwise charged turbo show before the dance hedran, perhaps the only song in popular music history with a 100 percent success rate in causing older men to cry. And also some women, like the beer-gobbling young woman in Section 15, who sniffed happily among friends in the previous two hours of the Brooks show, then suddenly started crying so uncontrollably in the aisle during the dance that security guards and strangers alike came to her aid. That fulfilled an unlikely promise Brooks made to the complex local media and a number of stray national media representatives earlier today, when asked why he took so much to the stadium (despite some diving bars he plays to promote the new single). I hate to say it as a guy, because I never believed it, but size does matter, he said. And 17,000 people sing 'unanswered prayers', compared to 40,000 people who sing it? Get ready, 'cause it sounds like you're hearing the angels from heaven. (That vow didn't come true - Brooks skipped this old one in a two-hour lineup. I try not to ring our bell, but we've been in this business long enough to get to where I feel we've earned a chance to try to make stadiums. ... When you're a kid, that's what you think of him, because you saw Freddie Mercury do Wembley and you'll see George Strait at Texas State or Capitol Stadium. Now I'm going to be real honest. Stadiums have been more of an ego thing for me (in the past), because stadiums can't be hot; They resonate, and they can't be personal. And this tour showed me the exact opposite. Someone asked me the other day, what's my favorite tour? It's this one. It's so hot. And I know we're all sitting here -- because I did it too -- we're all sitting here and going, 'A tour of the stadium can't be hot.' So get ready for what you're about to see tonight, be warned. It just makes you cry like a little baby. It's just close to right to startle enough that you might think he missed a marketing beat by not manufacturing Gareth/Idaho-branded handkerchiefs to sell alongside Brooks/Boise koozies. Cozis, I'm sorry.
